Trail Riders of the Canadian Rockies

BULLETIN No. 35

A comparatively new territory will be explored in the Eleventh Annual Trail Ride which will start a few miles east of Leancoil on the morning of July 27th. Those who participated in the Trail Ride of last Summer enjoyed so much the day of go-as-you-please at Bow Lake, that it was decided to spend two nights at one camp in 1934, and this has been arranged for the Camp at Ice River Valley. On the recommendation of Walter Nixon, who was formerly Game Warden at Leancoil and knows every foot of this Valley, the Camp will be pitched on the meadows at the foot of Shining Beauty Creek, an excellent centre for fishing, trail riding or climbing expeditions to the hanging valleys which are so characteristic of this district. The second Camp will be on the Wolverine Plateau, one of the most spectacular Alpine meadows in the Canadian Rockies, leaving an easy morning ride on the fourth day down Tumbling Creek to the Pow-Wow at Marble Canyon. The starting point is on the motor road a few miles east of Leancoil, within easy distance of Emerald Lake Chalet or the Yoho Valley Bungalow Camp, and motor conveyance will be arranged for those who spend the previous night at either of those places. Motor conveyance will be arranged after the Pow-Wow for Banff or Lake Louise. The inclusive rate for the four days, including such motor conveyance, will be $40.

THE ICE RIVER VALLEY

By GEORGE VAUX

The route of the 1934 Trail Ride has been planned to include the Ice River Valley, and as of late years this particular region of the mountains has been rather inconvenient of access, a few shafts of light thrown upon a "prehistoric" era of camping in that portion of the Rockies may be of timely interest.

Thirty years ago, in 1904 to be exact, a party of five spent a week in this region. In those days, an independent outfit was maintained at Field by Tom Martin, a man whose rare personality fixed itself indelibly in the minds of those who were so fortunate as to go out on the trail with an outfit under his direction. "Long Tom", as he was familiarly called, would take you camping anywhere in the vicinity of Field, and in those days there were plenty of places for pack outfits to go. No snorting motors climbed tortuously into the Yoho Valley, and the term "Safety-switch" referred only to those up-grade railway sidings on Field Hill. As a result, the Yoho presented one of the chief objectives for pack trains out of Field, providing glorious camp-sites and plenty of scenery, going in either directly from Field, or via Emerald lake, over Burgess Pass.

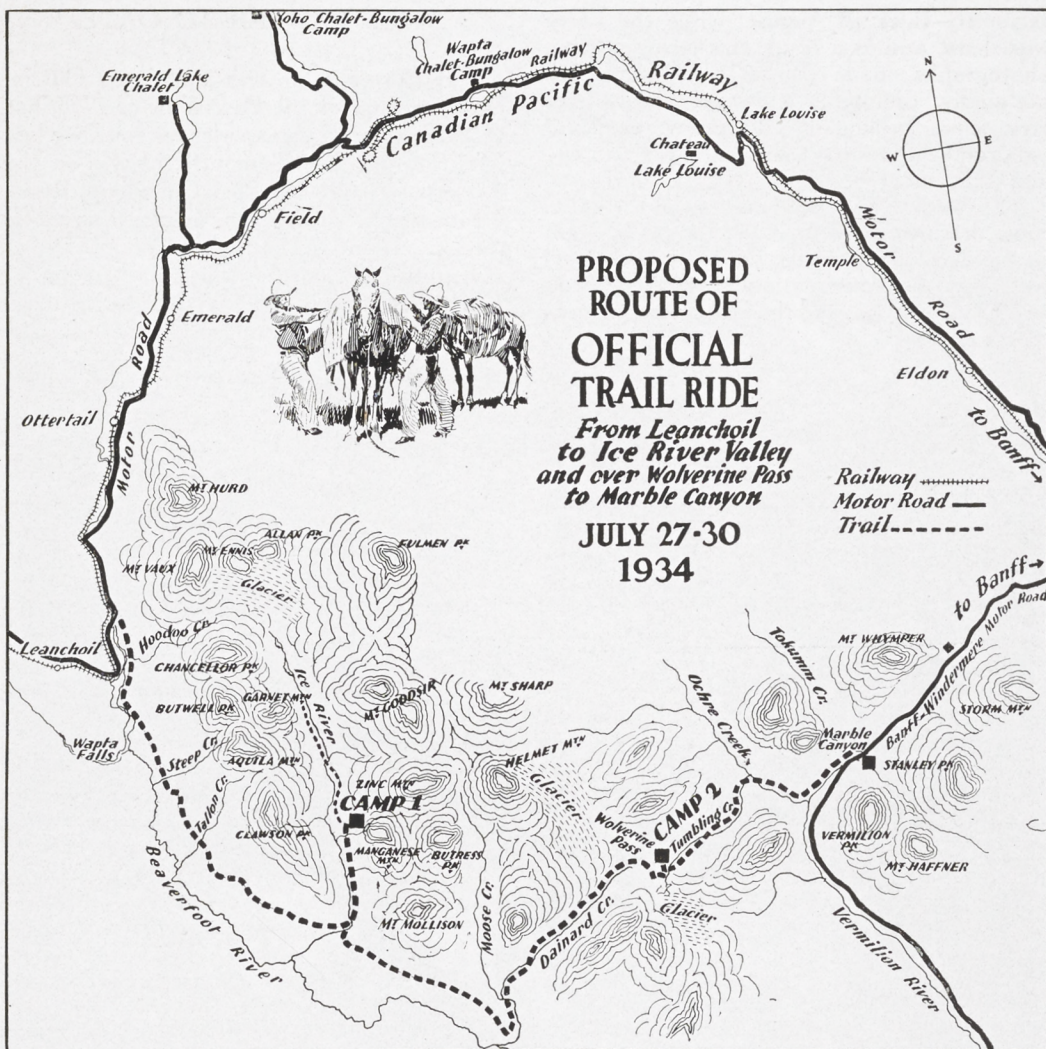

The next most important member of Tom's outfit, or perhaps after all the most important, who was present on the 1904 trip to the Ice River, was Billy Oak; a gentleman who presided with great dexterity over the cook-boxes and frying pans. His great aversion in life was the tourist, who, when on the trail, "claimed that she was really hungry, and then wouldn't eat enough to keep a gopher alive." This genial soul, at the conclusion of his mystic rites with Bannock reflectors, would take a miner's pan, heap it to overflowing with grub; then to retire under a neighbouring tree, and seating himself cross-legged, proceed to devour all its contents, to the great astonishment of any beholder to whom it would appear that the worthy cook must burst.

The horses were sent on ahead to Leancoil, the party proceeding thither by train from Field, riding the caboose or locomotive cab, a sport which has long since disappeared from the category of C.P.R. entertainment. Camp was pitched at Leancoil the first night, in order that a short side trip might be made to view the falls of the Kicking Horse near by. From Leancoil, a logging road wound southward, following along the twisting course of the Beaverfoot, and this provided a very easy trail for the first part of the journey, as far as the junction with the Ice River, where camp was made. The next day gave opportunity to visit Sodalite valley, with its curious outcroppings of the blue mineral from which the name is derived, and then on up the Ice River to Camp Goodsir, one of the most beautifully situated campgrounds in the Rockies. From this camp a short trip brought one into intimate contact with the gorgeous scenery toward the head of the valley; a galaxy of snowy peaks including Goodsir, Chancellor and Vaux. Unfortunately, back in 1904 the smoke was

The return trip was made via the same route, back to Leancoil, and thence by train to Field, a disadvantage which is now overcome by the construction of trails leading to Marble Canyon, and the Banff-Windermere motor road.

WILF CARTER TO DATE

Wilf Carter, who was appointed Official Trail Songster at the Pow-Wow of 1933, has had some interesting experiences since we last met. During the fall months he was on the Western circuit of the Canadian Radio Broadcasting Commission, singing three times a week. Then he went to the West Indies as an entertainer on the Christmas Cruise of the EMPRESS OF BRITAIN. In Montreal he had some of his songs recorded by the

Of late years few people have visited the Ice River, and as the hotel at Field no longer exists as such, under the hospitable supervision of Miss Mollison, there is little demand for outfits to be kept there. As a result, the 1934 Trail Ride presents an unusual opportunity to visit a portion of the Rockies, which, although close to the railway, is much less known in comparison with other spots similarly distant from train and automobile.

Victor Talking Machine Company of Canada for their Bluebird Series. Two of his songs were published in Toronto by Gordon V. Thompson (address Heintzman Building, Yonge Street, Toronto), namely, "Twilight on the Prairies" and "Dear Old Daddy of Mine". The T. Eaton Company featured him in a "Wilf Carter Week", and a guitar has been named after him, which he personally autographs—let us hope, for a consideration.

BEAVERFOOT AND ICE RIVER
VALLEYS - FROM MEMOIR 55 OF
THE GEOLOGICAL SURVEY,
DEPARTMENT OF MINES,
CANADA-by JOHN A. ALLAN

The Kicking Horse river at Leancoil bend, the point where it turns sharply northeast after having flowed almost due south for several miles, is joined by a large tributary from the southeast, the Beaverfoot. A glance at the map shows that the Beaverfoot valley has a northwest and southeast trend. It may thus be called a "strike valley", since it is parallel to, and subsequent to the general structure of the mountain ranges.

The Beaverfoot river has its main source in the mountains to the northeast of the wide valley. The main branch is called Moose creek, which heads in the slopes of mountains over 10,000 feet high and flows from a large glacier, the Washmawapta snowfield, lying in the Ottertail range to the east and south of Helmet mountain and covering about seven square miles. Moose Creek valley has a north and south trend and is in line with the valleys of Goodsir and McArthur creeks, and Cataract brook. It has a rounded outline, which shows that it has been shaped by the action of a valley glacier. Much of the outline of the sides of this valley is only six miles long. In the upper three miles of the valley the course of the creek is still very young and contains many rapids. Below this point at certain places in the valley floor, the stream has a floodplain several hundred yards wide. There is so much loose talus on the slopes of this valley that large masses of this loose detritus are carried down in the springtime by snow slides and heavy rains. The only large tributary of this stream is Dainard creek, which has a northeast and southwest trend.

About ten miles from its mouth, the Beaverfoot is joined from the north by a second equally large river, Ice river. Throughout the rest of its course the Beaverfoot is joined by numerous small obsequent or consequent streamlets and brooks from the steep slopes of the mountains on either side of the valley. Many of these are intermittent, but their youthful valleys or gullies are being continuously widened and deepened by erosion, so that the spring torrents bring down enormous volumes of rock debris, which, when it reaches the gentler slope of the broad trough, spreads out at random from the channels of the streamlet. This detritus in some places forms a fan-shaped mass covering up the roots and two to three feet of the trunks of the trees which thickly wood the floor and sides of the trough.

The valley of Ice river extends northward for about eight miles from where it joins the Beaverfoot, and heads in the slopes of lofty mountains of the Ottertail range, varying in height from 10,000 to over 11,600 feet. The mountains at the extreme end of the valley are covered in part by Hanbury glacier, which occupies about eight square miles and has an estimated thickness, in one part, of 1500 feet. This ice field can be regarded as a "through glacier," as defined by Tarr, since it drains from a low divide into the Ottertail valley as well as into that of Ice river. The valley of Ice river is narrow and deep, with very steep sides that are notched by several side tributaries, all of which head in glacial cirques. Some of these cirques hang high above the main valley. Numerous consequent and obsequent streamlets groove the sides of the valley. About two miles from its head, the valley floor broadens to half a mile in width and the river quietly meanders over this aggraded basin which has been gouged out by the movement of a valley glacier. This basin is followed by a narrow lip to the west of Mt. Mollison, through which the river passes in a long, continuous series of rapids, to join the Beaverfoot river three miles below.

There is much variation from place to place, in the grades of the main trunk streams as well as of the lateral consequents. The following table gives the grades of the streams included in the Beaverfoot trough:

Beaverfoot river	(25 miles)	850 ft. average	34 ft. per mile
Moose creek	(7 miles)	1800 " "	257 " "
Dainard creek	(5 miles)	1800 " "	360 " "
Ice river	(12 miles)	1500 " "	125 " "
Zinc creek	(2 miles)	2000 " "	1000 " "
Sodalite creek	(2 miles)	2400 " "	1200 " "
Shining Beauty creek	(1½ miles)	3000 " "	2000 " "
Mollison creek	(2 miles)	2400 " "	1200 " "

This table shows that the tributaries of Ice river, especially, are hanging high above the main valley floor. There are many smaller streams which would show an even greater average grade per mile.

The hanging valley is a very common topographic feature in the Rocky mountains and there are many of them in the district mapped. The mouths of many of the lateral valleys are "hung up" 700 to 1200 feet above the floor of the main valley.

The writer has found that in the district being described, differential glacial erosion by the combined results of glacial deepening and widening of the main valley at points where the ice was thickest and with strongest motion, has caused the formation of the hanging valleys.

Game is becoming abundant, as it is protected within the limits of the Yoho park. Large game consists of goats, deer, moose, cariboo, and grizzly, cinnamon, and black bears. Of these the goat is especially abundant, and may be seen at almost any time in large flocks on rocky slopes above timber line in Moose Creek valley.

Small game includes beaver, lynx, coyote, wolverine, martin, mink, marmot and porcupine. Beavers are abundant in the Beaverfoot valley. They have dammed up the watercourses in many places, forming swamps and lakes. One of these lakes is within half a mile of the Ice river bridge, near the edge of the trail.

The Ice River intrusive mass is the only igneous body thus far located in this part of the Rocky Mountain system.

The rocks of the area are sedimentary, metamorphic and igneous. The igneous rocks occur as an irregularly shaped intrusive mass, occupying about 12 square miles and exposed in Ice River and Moose Creek valleys. The igneous body is alkaline in nature and amongst the rock types present nephelite and sodalite syenites predominate, but these grade into numerous varieties in which the iron-magnesium content increases, with a proportional decrease of the light coloured constituents, until the final type is one free from all light coloured minerals.

The age of the intrusion cannot be definitely fixed from field evidence. It is later than the lower Palaeozoic, and the writer is inclined to place it at the close of the Mesozoic or early Tertiary. This intrusive body is one of the very few occurrences of igneous rock in the Rocky mountains of Canada. It is one of the few localities in which sodalite occurs.

This mineral has a beautiful blue colour, varying from deep to very light shades and is sometimes almost white. It takes an excellent polish and has a handsome appearance in jewelry. Some of this material has been exposed to the light for two years and it does not show any sign of fading. When it occurs as a mineral constituent of the ditroite, the rock becomes important as a decorative stone, especially for inside ornamentation, since it would readily weather when exposed to the atmosphere, as it has a hardness of a little over 5. The veins of sodalite vary from a fraction of an inch to 2 inches in width. They cut both the ditroite and nephelite syenite and frequently show a subparallel arrangement. Pyrite and sometimes cancrinite are associated with the sodalite, which, although detrimental to the rock for outside use, does not diminish its economic value for inside decorative purposes. The presence of these minerals gives the sodalite a rather brownish shade which adds to its peculiar appearance. A boulder, 6 inches in diameter, found near the head of Ice River valley, consisted almost entirely of blue sodalite and honey-yellow cancrinite. This boulder, since it could not have been derived from any part of the complex now exposed, suggests that veins of this material cut the sediments at the head of Ice River valley not directly in contact with the igneous rocks.

The age of the intrusion of the Ice River alkaline rocks cannot be definitely fixed. It cuts the lower Ordovician beds of the Goodsir formation which is the highest member of the sedimentary series represented in the Ottetail range in which the igneous body occurs.

The intrusion occurred after or towards the close of the period of folding and before the principal period of orogenic disturbances, when the rocks were sheared and the mountain ranges elevated. The chief disturbances which caused the principal elevation of the Rocky Mountain system, are believed by Dawson and other workers throughout the Rocky Mountains, to have occurred at the close of the Laramie. The folding referred to, which preceded the shearing and also the intrusion, is post-Cretaceous in age. The age of the Ice River mass from structural evidences may be regarded as post-Cretaceous.

At the request of the composer, who is Conductor of the Temple Male Voice Choir and is in the service of the Parks Branch, Department of the Interior at Ottawa, the Secretary-Treasurer wrote the accompanying words, so that it could be used as a song.
